

Developmental Motor Screen

A child's most critical time of development occurs in the early years of life. At no other time, is skill acquisition more malleable as it is from birth to age 5. Where each child develops at their own individual rate, there are general parameters that typically occur at certain age ranges. Successful movement of a child from pre-school to kindergarten and beyond lies in the solid foundation of these developmental skills.

A developmental motor screen provides knowledge to a parent on the developmental maturity of the child and suggestions on ways to help further sharpen and strengthen skills needed for school readiness.
